The New Testament Octapla presents—for the first time—the full text of eight English translations of the New Testament, from Tyndale to the Revised Standard Version, arranged on facing pages. It shows the development of the Tyndale-King James tradition, in the succession of translations from 1525 to 1611 and in the revisions from 1870 to 1960.

Versions included here, with dates in parentheses indicating years of original publication, are:

Tyndale (1525) 1535	Rheims 1582
Great Bible (1539) 1540	King James (1611) 1873
Geneva Bible (1560) 1562	(RV 1881) ASV 1901
Bishops' Bible (1568) 1602	RSV (1946) 1960

TYNDALE is represented by his final revision, the GH edition published in 1535, which is reprinted here for the first time in book form.

Miles Coverdale's translation, known as the GREAT BIBLE, was commissioned by Sir Thomas Cromwell, Secretary to King Henry VIII, and Vicar General. The first edition, published at London in 1539, was the first "authorized" edition. The second edition, used here, was published in 1540.

The GENEVA BIBLE was published by English Protestants who had fled to Geneva from the persecutions under Queen Mary. Although never "authorized" it became the household Bible of the English-speaking peoples. The second edition, 1562, is used here.

The text of the BISHOPS' BIBLE is that of the revision of 1572, as printed in the edition of 1602. This Bible was authorized by Convocation, and its possession enjoined upon the churches. This became the basis of the revision under King James.

The RHEIMS translation is copied from the first edition, 1582. It was made from the Latin Vulgate by Roman Catholic scholars, the larger part of the work being done by Gregory Martin.

King James I ordained in 1604 that a translation of the whole Bible be made; in 1611 this version of the Bible was published, with a dedication to him. The text of the KING JAMES VERSION here used is taken from the critical edition which was published as The Cambridge Paragraph Bible of the Authorized English Version, in 1873.

The revision of the 1870's is represented by the AMERICAN STANDARD VERSION, 1901, rather than the Revised Version published in England in 1881, for its use led directly to the next major revision, the REVISED STANDARD VERSION, which appears here as published in 1960.

Each of the versions is reproduced in The New Testament Octapla in the edition on which succeeding scholars have based their work. The copy of Tyndale's GH edition in the New York Public Library, supplemented by photostats from the Bodleian Library of Oxford University, and photostats of the other sixteenth-century editions were used to ensure accuracy. The spelling, punctuation, and paragraphing of the selected edition of each version have been retained. Verse numbers have been added to Tyndale and the Great Bible to make for easier comparison.

The only footnotes included, beginning with the King James Version, are those which record variations in the text of the Greek manuscripts.

The Introduction summarizes the history of Bible translation in English, tracing the development of the eight versions represented here. Reproductions of an original title page from each of the eight versions are included.

Everyone interested in the development of the English language and of the English New Testament in particular will appreciate the usefulness of this volume. Ministers, students, and seminarians will find this book an indispensable reference work — helpful in preparing sermons and lectures.

Introduction

In 1841 Samuel Bagster and Sons published The English Hexapla, "exhibiting the six important English translations of the New Testament Scriptures." It contains the Greek text of the New Testament as edited and published by Scholz, 1830–1836; and below this, in parallel columns, the six English translations. Of the two versions associated with the work of John Wyclif it has the second—a freer, more natural translation which has been attributed to John Purvey. Then comes the 1534 edition of William Tyndale's translation; and next to it is the Cranmer edition of the Great Bible, 1540. In the fourth column is William Whittingham's translation of the New Testament, published at Geneva in 1557; in the fifth, the Rheims New Testament, 1582; and in the sixth, the King James Version, 1611. For more than a hundred years this has been a very useful volume. Its major defects are the inclusion of Whittingham's 1557 translation instead of its revision, which appeared as the New Testament of the Geneva Bible in 1560, and the omission of the Bishops' Bible, upon which the King James Version was based.

The present New Testament Octapla contains on facing pages the full text of eight English translations of the New Testament, from Tyndale to the Revised Standard Version. It is designed to exhibit the development of the Tyndale-King James tradition, both in the succession of translations from 1525 to 1611 and in the revisions from 1870 to 1960.

Tyndale is represented by his final revision, published in 1535; and Coverdale by the 1540 edition of the Great Bible. The second edition of the Geneva Bible is used, published in 1562. The text of the Bishops' Bible is that of the revision of 1572, as printed in the edition of 1602 which was used by the King James translators. The Rheims translation is copied from the first edition, 1582. The text of the King James Version is taken from the critical edition which was published as The Cambridge Paragraph Bible of the Authorized English Version, 1873. The revision of the 1870's is represented by the American Standard Version, 1901; and the Revised Standard Version of 1946–1952 appears as published in 1960. In each case, a version is given in the form in which it was available to, and presumably used by, the translators engaged in preparing the succeeding version.

1. Tyndale. The first English version of the Scriptures to be made by direct translation from the original Hebrew and Greek, and the first to be printed, was the work of William Tyndale. Part of a quarto edition of his translation of the New Testament was printed at Cologne in 1525, and the entire translation of the New Testament was published at Worms in 1526. These were followed by the publication of his translation of the Pentateuch in 1530 and of Jonah in 1531. In 1534 he issued a revision of his translation of Genesis and a revision of his translation of the New Testament. Finally The New Testament yet once again corrected by William Tyndale was published in 1535; and this became the basis of all later revisions, and the main source of the authorized versions of the New Testament in English.

The text of Tyndale's first translation of the New Testament (1526) was reprinted by Bagster in 1836 and by Francis Fry in 1862; and the text of his 1534 revision appears not only in the Bagster Hexapla but in a quarto edition published by the Cambridge University Press in 1938. The text of his final revision is reprinted for the first time, under Tyndale's own name, in the present Octapla.

Tyndale's "once again corrected" New Testament was a small octavo volume, printed by Martin de Keyser at Antwerp, and published in 1535 by Godfrey van der Haghen. One of its title pages bears a trademark with the publisher's initials, G H, and the date 1534; and it is generally known as the GH edition. Only four copies remain, none of which is perfect. For the present Octapla, the copy in the New York Public Library has been used, supplemented where necessary by photostats of the copy in the Bodleian Library of Oxford University.

2. Coverdale. In 1535 there appeared an English translation of the Bible by Miles Coverdale. This was the first complete Bible to be printed in English. It was not, like the work of Tyndale, a firsthand translation from the original languages; it was based upon the Latin Vulgate and upon the existing translations of Tyndale into English, of Luther and of Zwingli and his associates into German, and of Pagninus into Latin.

In 1537, a folio volume was published entitled The Bible, which is all the Holy Scriptures, in which are containyd the Olde and Newe Testaments, truely and purely translated into Englysh by Thomas Matthew. This was a compilation of translations by Tyndale and Coverdale. "Thomas Matthew" was a pseudonym adopted by John Rogers, a friend of Tyndale, who took Tyndale's manuscript translations, as yet unpublished, of the books of the Old Testament from Joshua to Second Chronicles, together with Tyndale's published translations of the Pentateuch and the New Testament, and published them all in this one volume, which he completed by adding Coverdale's version of the rest of the Old Testament and the Apocrypha. At the request of Archbishop Cranmer, Rogers' edition of the Bible, which was about two thirds the work of Tyndale and one third the work of Coverdale, was granted the royal license. Similar license was granted to Coverdale's version in the same year. It is Rogers' Bible, however, which became the foundation of all later English authorized versions, and it is through Rogers' republication that Tyndale's 1535 version of the New Testament had its great influence upon subsequent revisions.

In 1538 Coverdale issued a diglot New Testament, containing in parallel columns the Latin Vulgate and an English translation of the Latin. His purpose was to disarm criticism by showing that an English New Testament could faithfully represent the Latin which was used in the services of the Church, and to aid both priests and people to understand the New Testament by facilitating comparison of the Latin and English versions.

In 1539 Richard Taverner, a layman and lawyer, clerk of the signet to the king, published a revision of Matthew's (Rogers') Bible, one edition of which was issued in parts in order that poorer people who could not afford to purchase the whole Bible might buy one or more parts. He was a good Greek scholar, and made some changes in the translation of the New Testament which have been kept in later versions.

Meanwhile at Paris, in early 1538, Coverdale had begun another revision of Matthew's Bible, for which he had been commissioned by Sir Thomas Cromwell, Secretary to King Henry VIII, and Vicar General. The Great Bible, as this was called, was published at London in April, 1539. It was the first authorized English version, and a copy was ordered to be placed in every church. A second edition, further revised by Coverdale, was published in 1540, with a persuasive preface by Archbishop Cranmer. On its title page appeared for the first time the phrase: "This is the Bible appointed to the use of the churches."

The Coverdale-Matthew-Taverner period in the development of the translation of the Bible into English is represented in the present Octapla, as it was in the Hexapla, by Coverdale's last work, the second edition of the Great Bible.

3. The Geneva Bible. Under Queen Mary the printing of the English Bible ceased and its use in the churches was forbidden. Many English citizens sought refuge on the Continent, and a group of these at Geneva undertook the revision of the English Bible. A version of the New Testament, edited by William Whittingham, was published in 1557; and the Geneva version of the entire Bible, including a revision of Whittingham's New Testament, appeared in 1560. It was set in Roman type instead of the old blackface, and it was a quarto, easy to handle, instead of an unwieldy folio. It was the first English version to use numbered verses, each set off as a separate paragraph.

The Geneva Bible was never authorized, but it did not need to be. It became at once the people's book, the household Bible of the English-speaking nations; and it held this place for three quarters of a century. It was Shakespeare's Bible; and it was the Bible of the Puritans who settled New England. Between 1560 and 1644 at least 140 editions of the Geneva Bible or New Testament were printed; and it lasted longer in competition with the King James Version than any other English version.

4. The Bishops' Bible. Queen Elizabeth renewed the injunction that a copy of "the whole Bible of the largest volume in English" be placed in every church, and encouraged its reading. Because they lacked a sufficient number of copies of the Great Bible, and because many of these were "faultily printed," Archbishop Parker revived a proposal that had been made in Cranmer's day, but had then come to nothing—the proposal that the bishops themselves make a new revision of the English Bible. The resulting version, known as the Bishops' Bible, was published as a beautiful and stately folio, in 1568. It was authorized by Convocation, and its possession enjoined upon the churches "so far as it could conveniently be done." In 1572 another edition was published, with considerable revision of the New Testament. It is this revised edition of 1572, as reprinted in 1602, that became the basis of the revision under King James. The Bishops' Bible gradually displaced the Great Bible, which was not reprinted after 1569; but in popular use the Geneva Bible retained its pre-eminent position.

5. The Rheims New Testament. In 1582 an English translation of the New Testament was published at Rheims, made from the Latin Vulgate by Roman Catholic scholars, the larger part of the work being done by Gregory Martin, who had been trained as a scholar at Oxford University. A similar translation of the Old Testament, in which also Martin had taken the lead, was not published until 1609, at Douai. The distinctive characteristic of the Rhemish version of the New Testament is the closeness with which it adheres to the Latin.

6. The King James Version. On February 10, 1604, after a conference "for hearing and for the determining things pretended to be amiss in the church," King James I ordained: "That a translation be made of the whole Bible, as consonant as can be to the original Hebrew and Greek; and this to be set out and printed without any marginal notes, and only to be used in all churches of England in time of divine service." He appointed fifty-four men as translators, forty-eight of whom are named in the records that have come down to us. They worked in six companies, to each of which was assigned a section of the Bible. Two of these companies met at Westminster, two at Oxford, and two at Cambridge.

The nature of the undertaking was carefully defined in a list of "The Rules to be observed in the Translation of the Bible," of which the following are of especial importance:

- (1) The ordinary Bible read in the Church, commonly called the Bishops Bible, to be followed, and as little altered as the truth of the original will permit.
- (3) The old Ecclesiastical Words to be kept, viz. the Word Church not to be translated Congregation etc.
- (6) No marginal notes at all to be affixed, but only for the explanation of the Hebrew or Greek Words, which cannot without some circumlocution, so briefly and fitly be express'd in the Text.
- (14) These translations to be used when they agree better with the Text than the Bishops Bible: Tindall's, Matthew's, Coverdale's, Whitchurch's, [the Great Bible, here named after one of its printers], Geneva.

It was provided that each company would consider the work of each other company, and that differences would be resolved by correspondence if possible, and if not, be referred to the general meeting at the end. This was a meeting at London of a committee of six, made up of two representatives from the companies at each of the three centers, which devoted nine months to bringing together and finally editing the work. It was then seen through the press by Dr. Thomas Bilson, bishop of Winchester, and Dr. Myles Smith, of Oxford University; and Smith wrote an extended and informative preface, entitled "The Translators to the Reader." This version of the Bible, with a fulsome dedication to King James, was published in 1611.

The printing of the Bishops' Bible had ceased when the new version was undertaken; and the King James Bible at once took its place as the authorized version for use in the churches. The Geneva Bible, however, continued to be printed until 1644, and was widely used, not only for private reading, but in the writings and sermons even of some of the bishops.

It is a curious fact that no evidence has yet been found that the King James Version was ever authorized in the sense of being publicly sanctioned by Convocation or by Parliament or by the Privy Council or by the King. But it did not need that. Bishop Westcott, writing in 1868, said: "From the middle of the seventeenth century, the King's Bible has been the acknowledged Bible of the English-speaking nations throughout the world simply because it is the best. A revision which embodied the ripe fruits of nearly a century of labour, and appealed to the religious instinct of a great Christian people, gained by its own internal character a vital authority which could never have been secured by any edict of sovereign rulers."

The English Bible owes more to William Tyndale than to any other man, not only because he was the first to translate the Bible from the original Hebrew and Greek, but because the basic structure of his translation has endured through all subsequent changes.

A meticulous study of The Literary Lineage of the King James Bible, by Charles Butterworth, taking account of every change in the wording of forty selections, concludes that "approximately sixty percent of the text of the English Bible had reached its final literary form before the King James Version was produced," and has this to say concerning Tyndale's New Testament: "In it William Tyndale laid an enduring foundation: fully one-third of the New Testament in our Authorized Version is worded just as Tyndale left it;

and in the remaining two-thirds, where changes have been made, the sentences follow the general pattern of the underlying structure as Tyndale laid it down."

Next to Tyndale, the King James Version owes most to the Geneva Bible; and next to the contribution of Geneva is that of the Rheims translation of the New Testament, from which the King James translators accepted many words and turns of expression that were of Latin origin.

In the following brief list of a few of the renderings which the King James translators owed to preceding versions, and which have been kept by the revisers of our own time, modern spelling is used.

From Tyndale: "You cannot serve God and mammon" (Mt 6.24); "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow" (Mt 6.28); "where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them" (Mt 18.20); "It is more blessed to give than to receive" (Acts 20.35); "the unsearchable riches of Christ" (Eph 3.8); "out of darkness into his marvelous light" (1 Peter 2.9).

From Coverdale and the Great Bible: "till heaven and earth pass away" (Mt 5.18); "None of us lives to himself, and none of us dies to himself" (Rom 14.7); "Death is swallowed up in victory" (1 Cor 15.54); "the world has been crucified to me, and I to the world" (Gal 6.14).

From Taverner: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me" (Mt 16.24); "according to thy word" (Luke 2.29); "a certain creditor" (Luke 7.41); "Master, it is good for us to be here" (Luke 9.33); "he would have given thee living water" (John 4.10).

From the Geneva Bible: "his word was with authority" (Luke 4.32); "in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us" (Rom 8.37); "we have the mind of Christ" (1 Cor 2.16); "all the fullness of God" (Eph 3.19); "the eyes of him with whom we have to do" (Heb 4.13); "so great a cloud of witnesses" (Heb 12.1).

From the Bishops' Bible: "persecuted for righteousness' sake" (Mt 5.10); "faithless and perverse generation" (Mt 17.17); "overcome evil with good" (Rom 12.21); "was made in the likeness of men" (Phil 2.7); "the power of his resurrection" (Phil 3.10).

From the Rheims New Testament: "Why, what evil has he done?" (Mt 27.23); "Owe no one anything" (Rom 13.8); "the ministry of reconciliation" (2 Cor 5.18); "to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain" (Phil 1.21).

7. The Revised Version. For nearly two and a half centuries the King James Version maintained its place as the Authorized Version with only minor editorial corrections and amendments. In the 1850's, however, a movement toward its revision began to gather strength. This was because the study of the Greek manuscripts of the New Testament had shown that the King James Version was based upon a Greek text that was marred by mistakes, containing the accumulated errors of fourteen centuries of manuscript copying. It was essentially the Greek text of the New Testament as edited by Beza, 1589, who closely followed that published by Erasmus, 1516–1535, which was based upon a few medieval manuscripts. The earliest and best of the eight manuscripts which Erasmus consulted was from the tenth century, and he made the least use of it because it differed most from the commonly received text; Beza had access to two manuscripts of great value, dating from the fifth and sixth centuries, but he made little use of them because they differed from the text published by Erasmus.

In 1627, only sixteen years after the publication of the King James Version, a beautiful manuscript of the Bible, the Codex Alexandrinus, written in the first half of the fifth century, came to England, a gift to the King from the Patriarch of Constantinople. This greatly stimulated interest in the search for other ancient manuscripts of the Bible, and in the collation of their variant readings. In 1830 a fresh period began, as scholars undertook the sifting of the evidence, the formulation of principles of textual criticism, and the effort to recover the original Greek text, as free as possible from errors and additions. Carl Lachmann opened the period with a revised edition of the Greek text of the New Testament in 1831, which he followed by a larger edition, with fuller evidence, in 1842–50. Then came the epoch-making work of Constantine Tischendorf, discoverer of the Codex Sinaiticus and editor of the Codex Vaticanus, both dating from the fourth century, who published his critical edition of the Greek New Testament with a full textual apparatus in 1869–72. In 1881 Westcott and Hort, after twenty-eight years of joint labor, published The New Testament in the Original Greek in two volumes, the first of which contains the text and the second the introduction and notes. This work presented the oldest and purest Greek text that could be determined in the light of the manuscripts then known. It did not command universal assent, of course, and it must now be supplemented by the results to be drawn from notable early manuscripts that have been discovered in the last eighty years; but the work of Westcott and Hort remains, with that of Tischendorf, as a foundation for all subsequent critical study of the Greek text.

Westcott and Hort were members of the New Testament Company of the Revision Committee which was appointed by the Convocation of Canterbury in 1870, and confidential advance copies of the Greek text which they were editing were printed for the use of the Revisers. Though the Committee did not always agree with them—there are some two hundred such divergencies of judgment—it had full opportunity to avail itself of their research. In all, the Committee found that the Greek text underlying the King James Version of the New Testament was erroneous in more than five thousand readings, counting each rejected reading as one, whether it contains one word or several.

With the British Committee for the revision of the Bible was associated by correspondence a committee of American scholars organized a year later. The Revised Version of the New Testament was published in 1881, and that of the Old Testament in 1885. These included only such recommendations of the American Committee as were approved by a two-thirds vote of the British Committee. The agreement between the two committees was:

"If any differences shall still remain, the American Committee will yield its preferences for the sake of harmony; provided that such differences of reading and rendering as the American Committee may represent to the English Companies to be of special importance, be distinctly stated either in the Preface to the Revised Version, or in an Appendix to the volume, during a term of fourteen years from the date of publication, unless the American Churches shall sooner pronounce a deliberate opinion upon the Revised Version with the view of its being taken for public use."

In accordance with this agreement, the American Committee prepared an appendix containing a minimum list of recommendations which they deemed to be of sufficient importance to record, in the hope that they might ultimately be incorporated in the text.

After the publication of the Revised Version of the Old Testament in 1885, the British Committee disbanded, but the American Committee continued its organization, to take such action as should be called for at the expiration of the fourteen-year period. In the meantime, in 1881 and 1882, unauthorized editions of the Revised Version of the New Testament were published in New York and Philadelphia, which incorporated those of the readings preferred by the American Committee which had been recorded in the appendix. In 1898 the Oxford and Cambridge University Presses published a similar edition for the American market, with a preface referring to it as the American Revised Bible. These editions were unacceptable to the American Committee, since they contained only the preferences included in the appendix, which had purposely been reduced in number. Accordingly, in 1901, the American Committee published through Thomas Nelson and Sons The Holy Bible containing the Old and New Testaments translated out of the original tongues, being the version set forth A.D. 1611 compared with the most ancient authorities and revised A.D. 1881-1885. Newly Edited by the American Revision Committee A.D. 1901. It was copyrighted "to insure purity of text," and contained on the verso of the title page the Committee's certification as the "Standard American Edition of the Revised Version of the Bible." This edition contained the full body of the American Committee's preferences, and published in an appendix the British readings which they displaced.

The Revised Version of the New Testament, said Charles H. Spurgeon, the great London preacher, was "strong in Greek, weak in English." The revisers were literalists, especially in the New Testament. Their ideal of translation was a meticulous word-for-word reproduction of the Greek text in English words, using the same English word for a given Greek word whenever possible, leaving no Greek word without translation into a correspondent English word, following the order of the Greek words rather than the order natural to English, and attempting to translate the articles and the tenses with a precision alien to English idioms. The result is that the Revised Version and the American Standard Version are distinctly "translation English."

The problems presented by the archaic language of the King James Version were ineffectively handled by the revisers, who changed some of the misleading words but actually increased the use of other archaic terms such as aforetime, haply, holden, howbeit, would fain, must needs, peradventure. The King James Version uses the preposition "toward" 320 times, but has "to Godward," "to us-ward," and "to you-ward" three times each, "to thee-ward" once, and "to the mercy seatward" once. The revisers of 1881 inserted the archaic "-ward" in four additional passages: "to us-ward," Romans 8.18; and "to you-ward," Galatians 5.10, Colossians 1.25, 1 Thessalonians 5.18.

The Revised Version of 1881 and the American

Standard Version of 1901 are represented in this Octapla by the latter. This is because it is the more comprehensive revision; because it has been more widely accepted and used in America than the Revised Version of 1881 has been used in Great Britain; and because its use led directly to the next major revision of the Tyndale-King James tradition, the Revised Standard Version of 1946–1952.

8. The Revised Standard Version. In 1928 the copyright of the American Standard Version was acquired by the International Council of Religious Education, and thus passed into the ownership of the churches of the United States and Canada which were associated in this Council through their boards of education and publication. The Council appointed a committee of scholars to have charge of the text of the American Standard Version and to undertake inquiry as to whether further revision was necessary. After more than two years of study and experimental work, this committee decided that there was need for a thorough revision of the version of 1901, which will stay as close to the Tyndale-King James tradition as it can in the light of our present knowledge of the Hebrew and Greek texts and their meaning on the one hand, and our present understanding of English on the other.

In 1937 the revision was authorized by vote of the Council, which directed that the resulting version should “embody the best results of modern scholarship as to the meaning of the Scriptures, and express this meaning in English diction which is designed for use in public and private worship and preserves those qualities which have given to the King James Version a supreme place in English literature.”

Thirty-two scholars served as members of the Committee charged with making the revision, and they secured the review and counsel of an Advisory Board of fifty representatives of the cooperating denominations. The Committee worked in two sections, one dealing with the Old Testament and one with the New Testament. Each section submitted its work to the scrutiny of the members of the other section; and the charter of the Committee required that all changes be agreed upon by a two-thirds vote of the total membership of the Committee. The Revised Standard Version of the New Testament was published in 1946. In 1950 the International Council of Religious Education merged with other bodies to become the Division of Christian Education of the newly organized National Council of Churches. The Revised Standard Version of the Bible, containing the Old and New Testaments, was published in 1952, having been authorized by vote of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States of America.

It is one of the ironies of history that the King James Version remained unrevised for two hundred sixty years, then was revised with the utmost care, but that almost immediately there began the period which Sir Frederic Kenyon has called the Age of Discoveries, since it “has seen discovery after discovery widening our knowledge of the Bible text and its early history, and testing the results at which the scholars of 1881 had arrived by evidence with which they were totally unacquainted.”

Part of this evidence has been afforded by newly discovered manuscripts of the Biblical text. The evidence for the text of the books of the New Testament is better than for any other ancient book, both in the number of extant manuscripts and in the nearness of the date of some of these manuscripts to the date when the book was originally written.

The revisers in the 1870's wholly lacked the resources which discoveries within the past eighty years have afforded for understanding the vocabulary, grammar and idioms of the Greek New Testament. An amazing body of Greek papyri has been unearthed in Egypt since the 1870's—private letters, official reports, wills, business accounts, petitions, and other such trivial, everyday recordings of the activities of human beings. In 1895 appeared the first of Adolf Deissmann's studies of these ordinary materials. He proved that many words which had hitherto been assumed to belong to what was called “Biblical Greek” were current in the spoken vernacular of the first century A.D. The New Testament was written in the Koiné, the common Greek which was spoken and understood practically everywhere throughout the Roman Empire in the early centuries of the Christian era. This development in the study of New Testament Greek has come since the work on the Revised Versions of 1881 and 1901 was done, and at many points it sheds new light upon the meaning of the Greek text.

A major reason for revision of the King James Version, which is valid for both the Old Testament and the New Testament, is the change since 1611 in English usage. The greatest problem is presented by those English words which are still in constant use but now convey a different meaning from that which they had in 1611 and in the King James Version. These words were once accurate translations of the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures; but now, having changed in meaning, they have become misleading. They no longer say what the King James translators meant them to say.

The King James Version uses the word "let" in the sense of "hinder," "prevent" to mean "precede," "allow" in the sense of "approve," "communicate" for "share," "conversation" for "conduct," "comprehend" for "overcome," "ghost" for "spirit," "wealth" for "well-being," "allege" for "prove," "demand" for "ask," "take no thought" for "be not anxious," "purchase a good degree" for "gain a good standing," etc. The Greek word for "immediately" is translated in the King James Version not only by "immediately" and "straightway" but also by the terms "anon," "by and by," and "presently." There are more than one thousand such English words which are used in the King James Version in a sense substantially different from that which they now convey. It not only does the King James translators no honor, but it is quite unfair to them and to the truth which they understood and expressed, to retain these words which now convey meanings they did not intend.

The Revised Standard Version has taken full account of the new knowledge of the history, geography, religions, and cultures of Bible lands, and of the rich new resources for understanding the vocabulary, grammar, and idioms of the Biblical and related languages. It also breaks away from the literalism and mechanical exactitude of the revisions of 1881–1901, and returns to the basic structure and more natural cadence of the Tyndale-King James tradition.

The review of the Revised Standard Version by The Scotsman of Edinburgh concluded with the statement: "In general it may be claimed, whatever criticism may be directed to this or that minor detail of text or diction, that here we have the most significant and adequate of existing revisions, the one most tenacious in its style and form of the tradition of the English Bible."

The present Octapla does not attempt to reproduce the old forms of various letters of the alphabet, the contractions of certain syllables, or other typographical devices employed by the printers of the sixteenth-century versions. It retains the spelling of the words in these versions, however, with all the variations which were then a matter of common practice. This rule has been followed even in those cases where a particularly bizarre spelling may be a typesetter's error. In such cases an asterisk (*) has been inserted, to call attention to the fact that the error, if it is one, has been copied from the sixteenth-century volume. To facilitate comparison, verse numbers have been inserted in the texts of Tyndale and the Great Bible.

Except for the Great Bible, the sixteenth-century versions had marginal notes of exposition and comment, some of which were polemical. The King James Bible was more restrained. No marginal notes of this sort are included in the present volume.

Beginning with the King James Bible, however, The New Testament Octapla includes those notes which record variations in the text of the Greek manuscripts. For the King James Version, it includes those which are listed as textual notes by F. H. A. Scrivener in his Introduction to The Cambridge Paragraph Bible of the Authorized Version. For the revised versions of 1881–1901 and 1946–1960 the textual notes are more in number and more important, and their status is clearly indicated in their wording.

The publisher and the editor of The New Testament Octapla are glad here to acknowledge the efficient service of Mrs. Catherine Sherwood, who copied the text of four of the sixteenth-century versions; Mrs. Bernice Rich, who copied the text of the GH edition of Tyndale's New Testament, and who has been copy-editor and chief proofreader for the entire volume; and Mrs. Anne Temple, secretary to the editor. They express sincere thanks to Raymond P. Morris, Librarian, and Helen B. Uhrich, Assistant Librarian, of the Divinity School of Yale University; to James T. Babb, Librarian of Yale University, and Marjorie G. Wynne, Librarian of the Rare Book Room of the Yale University Library; and to Lewis M. Stark, Librarian of the Rare Book Division of the New York Public Library.

As editor, I here express my gratitude for the encouragement and counsel of William R. McCulley, President of Thomas Nelson and Sons, New York. And Mr. McCulley and I join in grateful acknowledgment of the interest and counsel of Dr. H. P. Morrison, Chairman of the Board, Thomas Nelson and Sons, Limited, Edinburgh.

A Note on Early English Translations of the Bible

Prior to the sixteenth century, translations of the Bible into English were made from the Latin Vulgate instead of from the Hebrew or Greek, and were not printed but appeared only in manuscript copies.

To the Anglo-Saxon period belong the songs of Caedmon, herdsman for the abbey at Whitby (c. 670); a version of the Psalms by Aldhelm, bishop of Sherborne (640–709); a translation of the Gospel of John by the Venerable Bede (d. 735); portions of Exodus and the Acts of the Apostles, and some of the Psalms, by King Alfred (849–899); and a translation of the Heptateuch by Aelfric, abbot of Eynsham (955–1020). Six manuscripts remain of the Anglo-Saxon Gospels, translated from a Latin text with distinct characteristics. The Lindisfarne Gospels and the Rushworth Gospels are Latin manuscripts written toward the close of the seventh century, with interlinear Anglo-Saxon glosses inserted three centuries later. There were many Anglo-Saxon Psalters, with the Latin text and an interlinear Anglo-Saxon gloss.

To the Middle English period (1150–1500) belong the Ormulum, a metrical paraphrase of the Gospels, with interspersed moralizations; the Psalter of Richard Rolle (d. 1349), a prose version with commentary; and a prose version of the Psalms which has been attributed to William of Shoreham (c. 1270–1350).

The first English versions of the entire Bible were the two associated with the work of John Wyclif, made by translation from the Latin Vulgate between 1380 and 1397. They were copied by hand, and there remain some one hundred eighty manuscripts, mostly of the second version. The two versions, printed in parallel columns, were published by the Oxford University Press, 1850, in four beautiful quarto volumes edited by the Reverend Josiah Forshall and Sir Frederic Madden, entitled The Holy Bible / containing / the Old and New Testaments / with the Apocryphal Books / in the Earliest English Versions / made from the Latin Vulgate by / John Wycliffe and his followers. The work has an extended Preface and an adequate descriptive list of the one hundred seventy manuscripts which the editors consulted, twenty-eight of which were of the first version and one hundred forty-two of the second version. The best recent account of the history of the Wyclif Bible is by Margaret Deanesley, The Lollard Bible and other Medieval Biblical Versions, Cambridge University Press, 1920; to which may well be added her Ethel M. Wood Lecture on The Significance of the Lollard Bible, published by the University of London, 1951.

It is not possible, without further evidence, to determine what part of the work upon the first version was done by Wyclif himself. But that is of no consequence. He inspired it all, including the making of the second version after his death in 1384. Both versions were made by scholars who were his immediate associates. Nicholas Hereford was largely responsible for the first version, which was completed before Wyclif's death. John Purvey, Wyclif's secretary, was responsible for the second version, which was completed by 1397.

The first version of the Wyclif Bible was a careful literal translation of the Latin Vulgate, with the English words following the order of the Latin words as closely as possible. Purvey himself gives a striking example of the mischief that may thus be wrought. In 1 Kings 2.10 (= 1 Samuel 2.10) the Latin has Dominum formidabunt adversarii eius, which the first version renders, "The Lord shulen drede the adversaries of hym." This follows the Latin word order, but ignores the Latin inflections which show that "adversaries" is the subject of the verb, that the verb for "shall dread" is plural, and that "the Lord" is its object. Purvey changes the translation to read, "Adversaries of the Lord shulen drede hym."

Purvey also criticizes the version's literal rendering of Latin participles, especially when they appear in an ablative absolute construction, and maintains that in an English translation it is better generally to use finite verbs. The following examples illustrate this and other differences between the first version of the Wyclif Bible (H) and the second version (P):

Mark 1.18 Et protinus relictis retibus, secuti sunt eum
(H) And anoon, the nettis forsaken, thei sueden hym

(P) And anon thei leften the nettis, and sueden hym

Mark 1.35 *Et diluculo valde surgens, egressus
abiit in desertum locum*

(H) And in the morewynge ful erly he rysynge, gon out, wente in to desert place

(P) And he roos ful eerli, and gede out, and
wente in to a desert place

Matthew 13.11 Qui respondens ait illis

(H) The which answeyng seith to hem

(P) And he answeride, and seide to hem

Luke 22.8 *et misit Petrum et Joannem, dicens:
Euntes parate nobis Pascha, ut manducemus*

(H) And he sente Petre and John, seyinge,
Ye goynge make redy pask to us

(P) And he sente Petre and Joon and seide,
Go ye, and make ye redi to us the pask

Luke 22.17 Et accepto calice gratias egit et dixit

(H) And the cuppe takun, he dide thankynge,
and seide

(P) And whanne he hadde take the cup, he dide gracy, and seide

Since the plan of the present Octapla does not include the text of Wyclif's New Testament, it will be well to quote a sufficiently extended passage to permit comparison with Tyndale and later versions. Here is the parable of the Prodigal Son, in Purvey's version, Luke 15.11–32:

And he seide, A manne had twei sones; and the yonger of hem seide to the fadir, Fadir, gyve me the porcioun of catel, that fallith to me. And he departide to hem the catel. And not aftir many daies, whanne alle thingis weren gederid togider, the yonger sone wente forth in pilgrymage in to a fer cuntre; and there he wastide hise goodis in lyvyng lecherously. And aftir that he hadde endid alle thingis, a strong hungre was maad in that cuntre, and he bigan to have nede. And he wente, and drough hym to oon of the citeseyns of that cuntre. And he sente hym in to his toun, to fede swyn. And he covetide to fille his wombe of the coddys that the hoggis eeten, and no man gaf hym. And he turnede agen to hym silf, and seide, Hou many hirid men in my fadir hous han plente of looves; and Y perische here thorough hungir. Y schal rise up, and go to my fadir, and Y schal seie to hym, Fadir, Y have synned in to hevene, and bifor thee; and now Y am not worthi to be clepid thi sone, make me as oon of thin hirid men. And he roos up, and cam to his fadir. And whanne he was yit afer, his fadir saigh hym, and was stirrid bi mercy. And he ran, and fel on his necke, and kyside hym. And the sone seide to hym, Fadir, Y have synned in to hevene, and bifor thee; and now Y am not worthi to be clepid thi sone. And the fadir seide to hise servauntis, Swithe brynge ye forth the firste stooles, and clothe ye hym, and gyve ye a ryng in his hoond, and schoon on hise feet; and brynge ye a fat calf, and sle ye, and ete we, and make we feeste. For this my sone was deed, and hath lyved agen; he perischid, and is foundun. And alle men bigunnen to ete. But his eldere sone was in the feeld; and whanne he cam, and neighede to the hous, he herde a symfonye and a croude. And he clepide oon of the servauntis, and axide, what these thingis weren. And he seide to hym, Thi brother is comun, and thi fadir slewe a fat calf, for he resseyvede hym saaf. And he was wrooth, and wolde not come in. Therfor his fadir wente out, and bigan to preye hym. And he answerde to his fadir, and seide, Lo! so many yeeris Y serve thee, and Y never brak thi comaundement; and thou never gaf to me a kidde, that Y with my freendis schulde have ete. But aftir that this thi sone, that hath devorid his substaunce with horis, cam, thou hast slayn to hym a fat calf. And he seide to hym, Sone, thou art ever more with me, and alle my thingis ben thine. But it bihofte for to make feeste, and to have joye; for this thi brother was deed, and lyvede agen; he perischide, and is foundun.

They that be stronge, nede not the phisicyon, but they that are sicke. <sup>13</sup> Goo ye rather and learne what that meaneth. I will have mercy, and not sacrifice. For I am not come to call the ryghtewes, but synners to repentaunce.

<sup>14</sup> Then came the Disciples of John unto him, saying: why do we and the Pharises fast, for the most parte: but thy disciples fast not? <sup>15</sup> And Jesus sayde unto them: can the brydegromes children mourne as longe as the brydegrome is with them? But the dayes wyl come, when the brydegrome shalbe taken from them, and then shall they fast. <sup>16</sup> No man putteth a pece of new cloth in an olde garment. <sup>18</sup> Pray that it may not happen in winter. <sup>19</sup> For in those days there will be such tribulation as has not been from the beginning of the creation which God created until now, and never will be. <sup>20</sup> And if the Lord had not shortened the days, no human being would be saved; but for the sake of the elect, whom he chose, he shortened the days. <sup>21</sup> And then if any one says to you, 'Look, here is the Christ!' or 'Look, there he is!' do not believe it. <sup>22</sup> False Christs and false prophets will arise and show signs and wonders, to lead astray, if possible, the elect. <sup>23</sup> But take heed; I have told you all things beforehand.

<sup>24</sup> "But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun will be darkened, and the moon will not give its light, <sup>25</sup> and the stars will be falling from heaven, and the powers in the heavens will be shaken. <sup>26</sup> And then they will see the Son of man coming in clouds with great power and glory. <sup>27</sup> And then he will send out the angels, and gather his elect from the four winds, from the ends of the earth to the ends of heaven.

<sup>28</sup> "From the fig tree learn its lesson: as soon as its branch becomes tender and puts forth its leaves, you know that summer is near. <sup>29</sup> So also, when you see these things taking place, you know that he is near, at the very gates. <sup>30</sup> Truly, I say to you, this generation will not pass away before all these things take place. <sup>31</sup> Heaven and earth will pass away, but my words will not pass away.
